

I have been reaching out to other schools in an effort to learn more about how they approach agency in the art classroom. After hearing Sascha Heckman speak at the ACAMIS Spring Conference in 2018, I decided to attend his workshop. I made a professional connection via twitter and we started discussing having virtual PLC's between our art departments. Through social media, I have been able to connect with other innovative teachers and educational professionals. This process has really helped me to learn new strategies from which my department and I have developed assessment tools and planning guides to help our students achieve more agency in their learning process. I have really enjoyed extending my Professional Learning Network (PLN) and look forward to making more connections in the future.
